Autosomal recessive kallmann syndrome with otological symptoms: a novel mutation in the KAL-1 gene and review of the literature. Autosomal recessive Kallmann syndrome (KS) is characterized by hypogonadotropic hypogonadism with anosmia and/or hyposmia. Herein we report a novel mutation of the KAL-1 gene in a Chinese family and propose the presence of a distinct clinical syndrome among KS patients with infertility with otological symptoms (KSO-KS). Mutation analysis of seven KS patients with typical clinical findings of hypogonadotropic hypogonadism was performed in this study. Clinical findings, laboratory results, and genetic analysis were confirmed in the family of one KSO-KS patient. Clinical features of other KSO-KS patients were reviewed and summarized. Linkage analysis excluded the presence of other loci for KS. Two novel missense mutations, c.74C>G (p.Ala25Gly) and c.1212A>G (p.Tyr404Cys), were identified in the KAL-1 gene of a KSO-KS patient. The mutation p.Ala25Gly resulted in a single amino acid change at a highly conserved region of the KAL-1 gene. Analysis of the linkage data of KSO-KS patients suggested that the symptoms of KSO-KS are different from KS. The presence of otological symptoms in some KSO-KS patients suggests the existence of a distinct disease in some KSO-KS patients.

I am using the API to input a username and password and redirect to a protected page on the website. How can I use this method to update my web.config file? A: This was a bit difficult as not all web.config information is available in the context of the current request. First, I tested the following using a simple WebRequest. System.Web.HttpContext.Current.Server.MapPath("~/web.config"); This returned the full path to the web.config file. This is important as I only need to modify parts of the file that are not stored in the web.config file. My code is simple enough that this should suffice. Now, for the rest of the implementation, this site made some very useful suggestions:
System.Web.HttpContext.Current.Server.MapPath(@"C:\inetpub\wwwroot" + System.Web.HttpContext.Current.Server.MapPath("~/web.config")); This will return the full 3e33713323
