Studies on the polymorphism of codon-65 of the human apolipoprotein A-I gene in the Polish population: the prevalence of apo A-ICII* allele. Apolipoprotein A-I (apo A-I) is a major component of high-density lipoproteins and is associated with high-density lipoprotein and very low-density lipoprotein metabolism. The high affinity of A-I for cholesterol and phospholipids is a result of a specific interaction with cholesteryl ester transfer protein. A-I deficiency is an independent risk factor for cardiovascular diseases. The aim of the study was to assess the polymorphism of codon-65 of the human apo A-I gene in the Polish population. This study included 135 individuals. The genotype of codon-65 was determined by the polymerase chain reaction with restriction analysis. The prevalence of apo A-ICII* allele was 32.6%. The apo A-ICII* allele was more frequent in men than in women (P and design of the study; Y.W., X.Z. and X.L. contributed reagents/materials/analysis tools; Y.W., R.L. and C.L. wrote the paper.
