The present invention relates generally to threaded hollow tubular members, such as a drill string. More particularly, the present invention relates to a method and apparatus for cutting threads in a hollow tubular member having a plurality of layers of material with different circumferential rates of taper. Methods of manufacturing threaded tubular members, such as drill strings, are well known in the art. For example, U.S. Pat. No. 3,630,387 to Huber, et al. describes a method for providing a plurality of frustoconically shaped grooves in the inner and outer surfaces of a tubular drill string. The process described in this patent is to provide an extruded tubular workpiece and thread grooves are cut into the exterior surface by cutting threads into the interior surface of the workpiece. U.S. Pat. No.

2,876,884 to Masters describes another method for providing a drill string with threads in a workpiece. The invention described in this patent is a machine to roll a drill string as it is being manufactured to provide the drill string with integral or semi-integral helical grooves. This patent describes the method of "rolling" the drill string by rolling the threads in a workpiece, or by rolling the threads in a workpiece while simultaneously rolling the workpiece to obtain a desired angle of taper in the workpiece. The workpiece is rolled by a tool which incorporates a plurality of rollers which roll against the surface of the workpiece to cut the threads into the workpiece. The workpiece rolls around its longitudinal axis as the rollers roll around the longitudinal axis of the workpiece. As the workpiece rolls the threads are cut into the exterior surface of the workpiece. Although these patents describe processes for manufacturing threaded tubular members, such as drill strings, they do not describe a method for cutting threads in a hollow tubular member having multiple layers with different circumferential rates of taper., in: Lecture Notes in Mathematics, vol. 614, Springer-Verlag,
