for the most part our team, made up of old military soldiers, gamers, and lawyers, were rather shocked by this. we're no longer the young, golden haloed americans we used to be, but rather a dysfunctional, dysfunctional bunch. we're at the point now where our team is divided into two factions: those who support the idea of using the nsa's private exploits, and those who don't. personally, i'm in favor of using the exploits. as the head of the team, i am in favor of using them. however, i'm not entirely sure how well this idea will fly with the rest of the team. nevertheless, this is a necessary evil, and should be used to help us defeat the real enemy. dont get me wrong, i'm not trying to say that we're as bad as the nsa. we're simply people who believe it's our duty to protect our nation from those who would do us harm. i have tried everything i can think of to get this to work. everything that i have tried has been unsuccessful so far. i am not sure what to do. when i try to run the mod i get an error. no, it is not that. the problem is that i get an error where it says "there is no file called 'codwwii.esp'. i've been trying for a week or so to get this to work. i really hate that game because it looks cool but it is really not that good. the first few times i played it i was really into it, but now i hate the cover system. the multiplayer is pretty good. the game is very well balanced. it has some very fun multiplayer modes, like vehicle assault, which is basically a free for all on an objective. the game is well-rounded in this area. it also has the occasional "just for fun" game modes, like capturing flags, which are fun to play. my favorite mode is war mode. its a team objective-based game that i enjoyed very much. this mode is called oasis, and it is a game mode designed to encourage teamwork. teams of four must capture one of three flags that are spread out around the map and then defend it for as long as possible. once the flag is captured, the team can then run back to their base and hold it for as long as they can. the team with the most capture points at the end wins. it is a good combination of teamwork and good game design.

a lot of people were much concerned about it, especially senators who were and are my representatives in the us congress. the outcry about this use of facial recognition technology by government agencies was immediate and harsh, as it was perceived to be an invasion of privacy, at least in the minds of most americans. the outcry spread around the world, as it involved the governments of countries which are allies, but also many countries who have developed friendly relations with the u.s. the outcry intensified following reports that the use of facial recognition technology was the reason the u. government has been able to track the whereabouts of osama bin laden in the past decade. the us government was also widely criticized for its use of this technology for other uses such as id systems for airport security and tracking of criminal suspects. the reaction of the public to the use of facial recognition technology was extreme. americans, in particular, were outraged by the idea of being monitored simply for walking through a shopping mall. adding to this, u.s. citizens were outraged by the fact that the u. government could be reading or monitoring their emails and texts while at an overseas conference. there was general frustration with the idea of facial recognition technology as a way to identify individuals in public space and in commercial transactions. much of this is covered in a lecture based on an exposé of the war on terror by me and writer, and former mid-level pentagon and central intelligence agency analyst patrick carpenter. the lecture was hosted by open-government and open-government litafaction group the open secrets organization. we covered much of this information in the program on open-government themes (see the transcript of our summer podcasst r). the open secrets lecture is embedded below. 5ec8ef588b
