the german telemedicine is an independent subject of study. thus, an expert from the science of medicine as well as from economics and law is set in motion to develop the different branches of telemedicine. in accordance with the sixth syllabus, a close cooperation with industry is to be realized in order to provide the participants with practical knowledge of the subject. in doing so, it is important to utilise the best training courses with relevant institutes and companies and to verify the german medical system for the interpretation of medical documents and for the act of instruction of the participants. this is not only a necessary qualification for the future practitioners, but it will also benefit the telemedicine-system in germany. the development of the euro is difficult; in particular, the transition to a credible monetary union requires coordination at the national level. in this respect, the monetary union has changed over time, from simple confidence bonds, to a stable system of interest rates, to the euro. the participation of european countries in the emu can be achieved only if national politics has gone beyond this historical stage and has opened up to a more open approach. at the national level, governments have to understand that the discussion on the future of europe does not end at the borders of their own countries. the question of european identity will remain open until the day of european integration. this is the major challenge for the european union and the european parliament in the coming months. unodc notes that this is the lowest yield of illicit drugs since the 1970s. it adds that until 2018, the illicit drug supply grew by only 6 percent annually in real terms, much lower than the growth rates of previous decades.

the diploma exams are the equivalent to the public school entrance exams for the oberstufe (high school), which may also be the abitur (comparable to the european baccalaureate). the selection consists of language tests, mathematics tests, and a written test (the erste schritte (first steps) and the zweite schritte (second steps). the decision as to whether the student is accepted, declined, or referred to a different school (as the case might be) is a complex one, but is in accordance with the european situation, in which every state decides its own quotas, using the so-called ersten schritte (first steps) to decide if the individual student is qualified to continue to higher studies. the so-called schwefel-test (literally phineus test) is a weighing of the potential success at that school with regard to the current entry for that year and is more or less the same for every major higher education institution in germany. secondary schools in germany are divided into grund- and mittelschulen (junior and senior schools), as well as sonderschulen (special schools), and are supplemented by a number of hauptschulen (main schools) and realschulen (boarding schools). the hochschulen (university) proper are divided into pre-university, undergraduate, and graduate programs. students at most of these schools take the abitur (baccalaureate) or the hauptschulabschrittter (university-pre-baccalaureate/students). a consortium of swiss universities co-designed and developed a new mobile app that is intended to help refugees living in the arber to better access legal aid. refugees in need of legal aid can contact the nearest public hotline for advice. the app offers information on the relevant legislation and regulations of refugee law, and it also allows individuals who are only informally speaking represented in proceedings to take sound legal advice (gumazakis 2018). the app is also designed for the field staff of the public hotline who then, in addition to informing the refugee, can put the refugee in touch with an advocate who will take over from there. in collaboration with the associations sco, and the italian red cross, the project was initiated and run by the geneva-based software company, apex systems, under the name mobile app for legal aid services for refugees (mags). an algorithm was developed, which is based on previous patterns of the service providers. it was then optimized against the objectives of refugee law and against the needs of the refugee receiving assistance.
